About the Authors

Michelle Vásquez-Ruiz is a graduate student in the department of History at Cal State LA. Her graduate work explores the histories of transnational movements in Indigenous communities. This academic endeavor also honors her Binni Zaa' (Zapotec) ancestry. As a daughter of Oaxaqueño immigrants who reside in Los Angeles, her academic work is dedicated to furthering an understanding of Indigenous American diaspora through an analytical lens of settler-colonialism. She is interested in looking at how Indigenous communities that migrate across borders maintain culture and community and how they create transnational networks. Through her current role as student assistant at Cal State LA's Special Collections and Archives, she is dedicated to preserving the histories of underrepresented communities. She actively encourages students and community members to construct their own historical narratives through archival preservation. In the fall, she will be pursuing a doctoral degree at the University of Southern California in American Studies.

Joann M. Medrano is the founding U.S. History teacher at Alliance Margaret M. Bloomfield High School in Huntington Park, CA, who completed her Master's degree in History in Fall 2016 at Cal State LA. Joann was first published in Perspectives Vol. 43, which featured her article, "The Ever-Changing Legacy of Ruben Salazar." In her limited free time, she enjoys traveling, reading, and watching competitive cooking shows. Joann would like to thank Dr. Choi Chatterjee and Dr. Priscilla Leiva for their invaluable support and guidance with this project. She would also like to recognize Mr. James Wenger for his willingness to share his time and personal collection. Finally, Joann would like to thank her friends and family for their unwavering encouragement through her lengthy education and now career; she is infinitely grateful.

Megan Lange is a History M.A. student at Cal State LA, with a focus on U.S. history, Latin America, and gender. She graduated from UC Santa Barbara with an M.A. in Latin American and Iberian Studies as well as from North Park University, Chicago, with a B.A., double major in English literature and Spanish. A former AmeriCorps VISTA volunteer, current Rotarian, Alpha Gamma Sigma Statewide Honor Society advisor, and community college educator, Megan believes in the transformative power of education through service and action- based learning. She hopes to expand her teaching options with the addition of a history background and is grateful to the faculty of Cal State LA for making her experience enjoyable and practical. She is especially thankful to Dr. Carole Srole for her expert guidance with this article and for making the best peanut soup she's ever had. She also thanks her husband, for his support and constant reminder of "si se puede" these past two years.

Nancy Escalante is an undergraduate History student at Cal State LA. Her research interests include the Latinx experience in the U.S., Central America, and women and gender. Nancy would like to thank Dr. Ángela Vergara for mentoring her through her research and writing process. She would also like to thank Director Ericka Verba for allowing her to use the Latin American Studies Department's rich primary source library. She wishes to acknowledge Cal State LA History Department's brilliant faculty for continuously inspiring her and renewing her interest in History. Nancy currently works in the Special Collections and Archives Department at the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library and in her free time enjoys quoting The Simpsons. She will continue her studies as an M.A. student in History at Cal State LA in Fall 2017.

Katherine (Hye Ryun) Yang is an M.A. student in the History Department at Cal State LA. She received her B.A. in History from Cal State LA and graduated magna cum laude. As a first-generation immigrant from the Republic of Korea, she is deeply interested in investigating how female historical agents constructed "global" identities, and shaped local, national, and transnational infrastructure of migration and politics. She plans to study U.S.-Korean relations as a doctoral student. She would like to express her gratitude to Drs. Carole Srole and Christopher Endy for their guidance and support in completing this project. She would also like to thank Drs. Choi Chatterjee, Afshin Matin, Birte Pfleger, Mark Wild, and Ping Yao for their intellectual contributions and emotional support to her development not only as a historian but also a mature human being. Katherine would like to dedicate her first published essay to her parents, who light up her life.
