Brown Institute Plans Broad Scale Probing of Issues

The Edmund G. "Pat" Brown Institute of Public Affairs, established at Cal State last fall, is planning a broad scale study of issues of public concern in California.

It was during his eight years as governor of California (1959-67) that "Pat" Brown signed into law the legislation which took the state colleges out from under the control of the State Department of Education and created the separate system of higher education now known as The California State University. It was also during his time in office that major strides were made in the development of the state's highways and its water distribution system.

As honorary Chair of the Institute's Advisroy Board, Governor Brown says that the institute "will continue to define and direct our thinking on such issues as natural resources and the environment; land use; air quality; transportation; health care; the state's fiscal policy; entitlements and family; youth and minority crime; education, political institutions, housing, and immigration."
